This conference is part of the activities of the Global Research and Educational Foundation India in collaboration with ISA Working Group 01 Sociology on Local-Global Relations, ISS RC 14 Globalization and Culture, ISS RC 08 Inequalities, Stratification and Exclusion Studies.

Mass media communication has played an important role in strengthening the project of modernity in different parts of the world in postwar period. The nations which got independence from the colonial rule largely adopted modernization approach of development in Asia, Africa and Latin America. Mass communication helped in disseminating the messages of development used by development agencies. Apart from the print media, radio, cinema and television constituted the modern mass media of communication. Although Frankfurt School of Critical Theory viewed mass media in a critical manner and labeled it as producer of a mass society and mass culture which promote high level of consumption and consumer culture. They also point out that media also project false needs through various advertisements propagated through mass media.

The rise of feminist movement in later half of twentieth century had a great impact on social science research and opened a new area of social enquiry in the form of research focusing on the issues related to women and their marginalization in different walks of life. As a result, today gender inequality has become a prominent area of social science research. The scholars of development studies developed distinct approaches/perspectives to analyse the relationship between women and development. In the early phase, social scientists adopted welfare approach to understand the issues related to women. Women in Development (WID) was another approach to analyse the issue. Later on, emphasis was laid on Women and Development (WAD) by adopting neo-Marxist approach and dependency theory. In 1980s there was a paradigm shift with an emphasis on “gender” and a new perspective Gender and Development (GAD) was introduced which emphasized on gender equality and other gender concerns in the process of development. Another perspective on women looks upon the effectiveness of the development measures in eradicating the gender inequality in different spheres of social life. Mainstreaming Gender Equality (MGE) perspective represents to a new approach in dealing with the problems of women in development process and emphasizes on the equal participation of both the men and women in development process. These developments have transformed the focus of social science research and a number of social scientists have examined the interrelation between gender and development.

A number of researches have been conducted on the role of women in mass media communication. Women were neglected on mainstream mass media organizations with a limited role. However, the communication revolution which took place from the last decade of 20th century with the advent of globalization era has transformed the media and opportunities to women folk increased in all the spheres of media communication. Information technology and digitalization of media brought new opportunities to the women in entertainment industry. The transformations in the field of mobile telephony have further revolutionized the fields of personal and mass communication. A global communication system which emerged in last two decades has a capacity to influence social, economic, political, environmental, cultural spheres throughout the world.

In the emerging new world order, media, gender and development constitute important variables. The conference is aimed to deliberate on the issues related to this pertinent area of research with an emphasis on the configurations of the communication and development processes and gender issues both at the global and local levels.
