President's Letter

My Dear Colleagues,

Greetings from New Delhi (National Capital Region)

In the last six months, we have been busy with several academic tasks, particularly in organizing the sessions of WG01 for the V ISA Forum of Sociology held at Rabat (July 6-11, 2025). I am happy to inform you that we organized 17 sessions for the Forum, including a session for the Business Meeting on 8th July 2025. The total number of abstracts presented in these sessions was 76. For this, we appreciate the session organizers and authors for their contributions.

We have successfully conducted the Interim Conference of the Working Group in New Delhi recently in December 2025 with active participation of the WG01 members and Office bearers and ISA President, Prof. Geoffrey Pleyers, who inaugurated the conference.

So far, we have 87 active members in the group. We are making efforts to increase the membership of the WG up to more than 100 so that we can claim the status of a research committee in the near future. This is my appeal to all the active members to make serious efforts for the new regular and student membership among the colleagues and students, so that we can also get more sessions in the ISA conferences, as sessions are allotted on the basis of the strength of the membership.

Finally, I am thankful to Dr. Sarvesh Dutt Tripathi, of University School of Mass Communication, GGSIP University, New Delhi, India, for preparing and publishing the newsletter of the WG.

With best wishes and warm regards, and wishing all of you a very happy and prosperous New Year.

Yours sincerely

International (Interim) Conference on
Geopolitics, Media and Nation States: Local and Global Dynamics

New Delhi (December 2-6, 2025)

In collaboration with Global Research and Educational Foundation India (GREFI) and ISS-RC 14 Globalization and Society

Venue:
Institute of Social Sciences, 8, Nelson Mandela Road, C1, Vasant Kunj, New Delhi, India

Geopolitics is a multidimensional concept. The fundamentals of geopolitics begin with the unique imperatives and constraints of nation-states. They involve looking at all the attributes that affect a country or a region and dissecting each piece to better understand its implications. The overall geopolitical picture of a country depends on the patterns of interaction and integration of elements like geography, politics, economics, military, technology, and culture. The term geopolitics refers to two types of conflicts: external or international geopolitics (generally diplomatic or armed conflicts between two or more states, usually concerning maritime or land borders) and state's internal geopolitics (a number of conflicts, civil wars, guerrillas, and political, ethnic and religious battles occurring within a state). Both external and internal conflicts have some common aspects that are closely related and are characterized by a high level of violence and media coverage. The global media coverage of these geopolitical conflicts is not as systematic as often thought. Sometimes, non-violent international crises and conflicts also occur as in the case of the Belgian crises (2011-12) or the break-up of Czechoslovakia in 1992 have wide media coverage at the global level at times. Even the deadly conflicts do not get wide media coverage. Thus, the relationship between violence, high media coverage, and geopolitics is not absolute. The local geopolitical conflicts usually 'make use of their network of influence, and generally non-violent demonstrations, or they restore to justice'. They clash during 'public debates, electoral campaigns or press campaigns and discrete negotiation',

The forces of globalization have created a global media system connecting every corner of the planet. The new communication technologies facilitated multiple digital platforms for communication. The innovations of smartphones/tablets/i-pad empowered the common man to interact at the local, regional, and global levels. Thus, media coverage of internal and external conflict is not restricted but is open and wide. The distinction between mainstream media (mainly national and international television, newspapers, websites, etc.) and social media (different social networking sites and applications and YouTube channels) is important in this context. While the mainstream media engages its audience through debates and repetition of programs at different time slots, social media focuses on an in-depth analysis of the events and issues. Thus, several parallel media narratives are created to influence the masses on both the internal and external issues that influence the social, economic, political, and cultural processes at local, regional, and global levels. The nation-states that lost their influence and power in the initial phase of globalization are trying to recapture it either through changes in their national and international policies or through external geopolitical conflicts involving their allies in wars and military interventions. The interim conference aimed to deliberate on these issues in detail. The subthemes of the conference are as follows: Geopolitics: concept, approaches and attributes; Geopolitics: External, internal, and local conflicts; Geopolitics and Urban Governance; Geopolitics and the Nation States; Globalization and the Power of Nation States; Globalization and media narratives; Geopolitics and the patterns of media coverage in social media; Democratization, Modernity, and Territorial Variations; Globalization, Geopolitical Conflicts, and Modern Nation States: Continuity and Transformation; Global Communication System and Geopolitics; Geopolitics and the changing world order; Geopolitical analysis of community structure and Electoral Behavior: Local dynamics; Crisis of Modernity and Changing World Order; Neo-Imperialism and the Nation States.

The conference was inaugurated by Prof. Geoffrey Pleyers, President of ISA. He emphasizes the need to focus on global sociology in light of the changes occurring in contemporary societies, with a focus on understanding the developments unfolding at the local level. The Keynote address was delivered by Prof. Rajesh Misra, Former Secretary of the Indian Sociological Society (2013-2015). Four Technical Sessions were organized, in which 37 papers were presented. A Special Session on Globalization, Media, and Indian Languages was organized on the third day of the conference. The Fourth Brij Raj Chauhan Memorial Lecture was delivered by Prof. Rajesh Misra on the Second day of the conference.
