

CALL FOR PAPERS

Número 3 “Childhood protagonism in contexts of vulnerability”

Deadline for papers submission: February 15, 2019

Publication date: July 2019

Worldwide, children and adolescents represent per se a vulnerable social and population group. This is due to their physical constitution (weaker, smaller), their short-lived experience, and their social position of dependence and lack of power. Although this vulnerability is apparently inherent to childhood and adolescence, other vulnerabilities produced by the circumstances that characterize the complexity of contemporary societies intersect it. Some of the most important are the migration flows, the economic crisis, the lack of care -or the helplessness that face those who should provide it-, the scarcity or low coverage of the actions of the State's social policies -such as education or social security-, the wars, and the environmental threats. Nevertheless, although their personal constraints and the adverse circumstances, childhood research has proved that, under certain conditions, children's and adolescents' abilities can transform their vulnerability into strength.

The review Sociedad e infancias calls researchers, educators, teachers and other professionals to send their contributions on children's and adolescent's agency, in social contexts and circumstances characterized by risks that make them more vulnerable.
