Local Democratic Challenges: Environment, Inequalities and Resilient Cultural Mediation in Fragile / Transitional Communities

Sept. 9-11, 2019, Conference Center, Cooperative Bank of Chania, Chania, Crete

The Theme:

Public policies are facing dramatic challenges on issues of local democratic participation. During the past few decades the nonprofit sector and local civil society organizations, as social economy organizations, have been involved directly into the politics of local and endogenous development. The crisis of representational democracy also gave an impetus to local innovations, where combined and even development has become the new autarky issue expressing also the power of place-topos and its people.

Participative democracy has become almost mainstream in public discourses and practices while issues of empowerment are also in place to couple those participative trends.

We are interested in relating participation to a socio-technical process whereby local community cohesion issues emerge as dominant forms impressed by globalization forces on the one side, but also by new knowledge forms, such as info-technology, which require symmetries in the manner of holistic approaches to be co-founded at local level.

Territoriality becomes important as local labor needs to organize new forms of organization where info-technology becomes key for bio sciences, including services such as, labor mobility. Tourism, culinary culture and gaming are cases in point. However, the key issue remains the social reproduction issues which are needed by the community. A dynamic knowledge based trusted network akin to an Orchestra maybe the key to communal sustainability. This requires local partnership and trusted political mediation, from the bottom, to reconcile divisions and galvanize the community.

We are seeking papers whereby different forms of participation, inclusion/exclusion issues, empowerment, cooperation, define forms of social and rural development at local level in order to bridge “separate” and often conflictual political communities of interest. The problems of fragile and rural communities are of interest here.

How do power relationships allow for inclusion and how such partnerships can become more effective tools for sustainable local governance? What is the of sociological practice mediation and how such mediation can be recognized technicity, as management?

We welcome papers focused on these issues leading to the overall consideration of the role of social capital, social economy and its role on local public (general interest) policy formation.

Why Chania:

Chania is a fascinating heritage city, a pioneer in building community-based enterprises, from as early as the 60's. One such Institution is our Host the Cooperative Bank of Chania. Chania faces current challenges that demand innovative ways for enhancing empowerment and participation. We will have the opportunity to see some of these challenges that require an emphasis on the development of its cultural institutions with the building of knowledge alliances with creative institutions at local, regional and international level.
