Three renowned musicians and intellectuals, Sumangala Damodaran (India), Ari Sitas and Sazi Dlamini (South Africa) will discuss, using words and music, the motivations and processes that have been involved in the creation of the Insurrections Ensemble, which is a poetry-music collaboration between Indian and South African poets and musicians since 2011. The collaboration, which has attempted to respond to events that unfolded in the two countries and in the rest of the world in the new millennium, has drawn upon the different poetic, instrumental and vocal traditions of the members of the ensemble and has resulted in five productions over the years. The session will also reflect on the possibilities and conundrums of the present moment for artistic production. Click on the link for a description of the Insurrections Ensemble
